Study and discussion questions:

1. Discuss some of the difficult and contentious issues surrounding the First Amendment. How do you feel about such things as freedom of speech, expression, religion, and the press? Are they all “absolute” freedoms? What sort of restrictions would you allow in each category?
2. Contending views on affirmative action reflect differing beliefs about the extent to which historical patterns of racism and discrimination have been overcome. To what extent is it legitimate to take past patterns of discrimination into account for such purposes as employment and college admissions?
3. What analogy does Sunstein make between the New Deal’s revolution in economic doctrine and the change he advocates in our interpretations of free expression and the 1st Amendment?
4. Sunstein claims that his proposals will further democracy. Critics might argue that he wants to limit liberty in a dangerous way. How would you assess these claims?
5. Relating to the Snyder article, identify the leading arguments against homosexual equality and gay marriage. What are Snyder’s arguments against each of these positions? Do you agree that these antigay perspectives serve to uphold rigid gender roles or “neo-patriarchy”?
6. The film “War on Whistleblowers” focuses on a very important part of the Constitution [freedom of the press] that the producers of the film argue is in grave jeopardy. How would you balance the public’s “right to know” with the government’s need for secrecy?
