Study and discussion questions:

1. Heineman notes that some of the founders felt that parties “represented minority interests working against the larger public interest” and should be suppressed. Do you agree? Why or why not?
2. Was the 2016 election a “critical” (realigning or converting) election using the criteria given by Heineman? Are we likely to have a critical election in 2020? Why are there so few such elections in the U.S. in your opinion?
3. Are political parties becoming less important to voters? Does the rise in “independent” voters mean anything? If so, what does it suggest?
4. Does television have an inherent bias towards imagery or can substantive discussions of political issues take place through this medium? Can you cite examples of substantive political reporting on TV?
5. Early in their article, Piven and Cloward cite several scholarly arguments that contend that widespread nonvoting has few, if any, negative political consequences. What do you make of these arguments?
6. Looking at Britt’s 14 characteristics for fascism, do any of them appear to be operating in the US? Identify one or two that you feel are particularly pervasive, and give some concrete examples that you see.
7. In the article by Chris Hedges, “The Coming Collapse,” he makes reference to both major parties and argues that “[t]he problem is not Trump. It is a political system, dominated by corporate power and the mandarins of the two major political parties, in which we don’t count.” What evidence does he provide that this is true? What would you agree with or disagree with and why?
